Storytelling

spellbinding Stories

Storytelling is an age-old tradition with hundreds of professional storytellers, and thousands of amateurs, still captivating people around the country.

Storytelling is about taking people into a fantastic, imaginary world where the stories and the environment become one and the same. Where the theatre is nature itself.

None are more synonymous with story telling than the bushmen who, over centuries, have passed on their heritage through story telling or their legacy through stories told in their bushmen paintings. Hunting skills and the tools of their trade being passed on from generation to generation at the feet of hunters and tribesmen through vivid and captivating stories filled with suspense, humour and wit.

Almost everything we do involves communication with others. If you think of the content and impact of these communications, they often involve the exchange of complex values, feelings and perceptions. Stories are used to persuade, describe and encourage action by motivating yourself and others.

A wonderfully entertaining and uplifting experience, in any language and style.
